Benchmarks are used by the Ordnance Survey (who make maps) to record height above mean sea level. They are normally cut into brick but sometimes a metal plate is used, as at the Museum. They are usually found at one or two feet above ground level and the actual height is recorded on the appropriate Ordnance Survey map for the area.
A benchmark is shown like this ⌅ with an upward pointing arrow, the tip of which touches the middle of a horizontal line.

This trail starts at the Museum and should take an hour to an hour and a half to complete. There are two different trails, the first covering Nantwich West, the second covering Nantwich East.
